A Letter from Alison

Bridge Lane Home & Garden began with a garden I had loved long before I ever imagined I would have the opportunity to care for it myself.

When my husband and I purchased the House on Bridge Lane, we inherited a remarkable property with a long history and, tucked within its landscape, the remains of a once-beautiful formal rose garden. I had admired the garden since childhood and was captivated by the sense of romance and possibility it still held, even after years of neglect.

The original garden had been thoughtfully composed with parterres, sculpture, a fountain, and wooden treillage. Over time, much of that had disappeared. Restoring the garden became our first priority, a labor of love—and an opportunity to understand the importance of the architectural elements that give a landscape its structure and identity.

As I began searching for treillage to re-create the original garden, I encountered a familiar problem. The kind of treillage I envisioned—substantial, beautifully proportioned, and architecturally detailed—was available almost exclusively through custom design and fabrication.

I began to wonder if there could be another way.

What if the beauty and character of custom garden architecture could be translated into a standardized, modular collection? What if it could be thoughtfully designed, durable enough to withstand the elements, and flexible enough to adapt to gardens of every scale?
That idea became Bridge Lane.

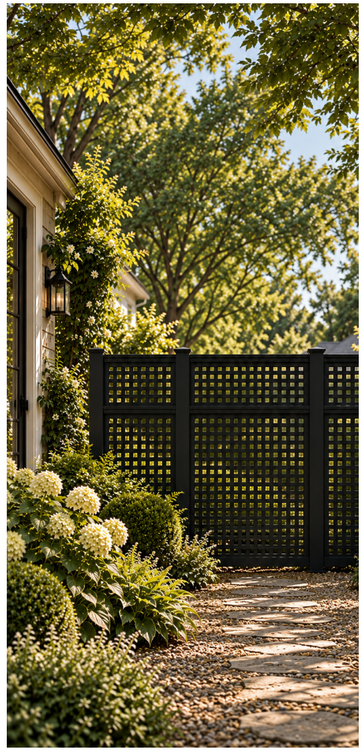

Inspired by the timeless architecture of historic gardens and born from the restoration of one very personal place, Bridge Lane Home & Garden was created to bring structure, beauty, and possibility to the modern landscape.

My hope is that these pieces, designed to be simple to specify and install, become a part of gardens that will evolve and grow for years to come—supporting climbing roses, framing views, creating rooms, and providing the architectural framework for nature to tell the rest of the story.

I am delighted to share Bridge Lane with you.
Warmly,
Alison Pickart
